Small group dialogues take place with women in local WLL teams. As a result, women identify their connections to the land, current issues for Iowa’s agricultural women, information and educational needs, and the most effective education strategies specific to their team.

An equal opportunity employer and provider
As an Iowa woman, odds are that you already own farm land, know someone that does, or will likely inherit a family farm.

Women, Land and Legacy (WLL) offers you the opportunity to network with other local women landowners and become well-informed decision makers of your land and farming operation.

Women, Land and Legacy was started in 2004 and is still expanding across Iowa.

“'We, as women, have a big opportunity to affect change in a positive way. Women, Land and Legacy helps us prepare for these opportunities’
- HOWARD COUNTY

Participating in WLL will help you answer your important questions such as:

- How much rent should I charge?
- What type of leasing agreement should I use?
- How do I find a renter that will manage my land the way I want it managed?
- How do I protect the long-term sustainability of my land?
- What are the other important issues I should be concerned about?

WLL involves government organizations and non-profit organizations that work with agricultural women in rural areas. The WLL local teams create a network of agricultural women who decide what programs, projects, and information they specifically need to assist them in farming and conservation decision making.
